In this fine book Richard Tuck critically examines the basis of natural rights theories, that we are all born with rights. These theories flourished only between 1350 and 1450, and between 1590 to 1670. He observes that most rights theories have been openly authoritarian. If 'natural men' possess property rights

The term "human rights" has replaced the term "natural rights" in popularity, because the rights are less and less frequently seen as requiring natural law for their existence. For some, the debate on human rights remains thus a debate around the correct interpretation of natural law, and human rights themselves a positive, but reductionist, expression thereof.
